FOREWORD

In response to the increased demand for audio-visual materials, the library has started on the development of an AV collection. Since no additional funds have been provided for an AV collection, we must rely on donations. Thanks to the generosity of Department staff, especially Adoptions and Native Issues, and funding from Alberta Career Development and Employment (PEP), we have produced our first audio-visual catalogue.

ADOPTION [VIDEORECORDING] : WHERE DOES IT LEAD? c1983

AAOF

Author..... Henry, Dave
Place & pub. Regina : Birdsong Film Producers
Call number. VT/525
Mat. type... Video tapes
Abstracts...

The Peyakowak Committee held a conference in Regina, April 1983. The committee's primary concern is the number of native children in care under Saskatchewan Social Services. Dave Henry, a social worker has worked for 15 years to keep children with their biological families. He explains the present adoption system and his beliefs about its' failures. A native child becomes a lost child, with no roots and no role models. Mr. Henry urges the committee to form a native family defence league. This tape is directed towards other native groups with similar concerns.

AAKP

Author..... Cole, Betsy
Place & pub. [s.l.] : NACAC Training Conference
Call number. CT/522
Mat. type... Audio-cass.
Abstracts...

Sydney Duncan, Program Director, "Homes for Black Children", Detroit gives the first presentation. She explains the history of adoption, especially transracial adoption. In 1972, the Association of Black Social Workers presented their position against trans-racial adoption. The Homes for Black Children projects have been successful in Detroit, Washington, and Little Rock. Ms. Duncan believes that the black community can respond to waiting black children. Betsy Cole, a strong advocate for special needs adoption discusses the future of adoption. In examining the future she sees new circumstances for adoption. She knows that the perennial problems must be addressed. Ms. Cole explains the roots of these ongoing problems. She feels that a great deal of courage is needed to face the future of adoption.

Call number. VT/543/pt.1-3

Mat. type... Video tapes

Abstracts...

This presentation includes 3 videocassettes. It explores Bryan and Linda's changing relationship with the birth of their son, Alan. The couple had been married nine years, when they decided to have a child. Marg Pullishy, the interviewer asks them about their decision to have children and their expectations of parenthood. They discuss Linda's pregnancy, labour, delivery, and hospital stay. The tapes follow the physical and emotional changes in Alan from birth to infancy. Linda visits the "Duggan Well-Baby Health Clinic". These clinics observe the health and well-being of the child and provide a program of immunization. A list of Edmonton's Well-Baby Clinics is provided at the end of that segment. Linda visits with her friends, Judy and Karen and their sons. They compare pregnancies, sons, and the difficulties and rewards of being parents. These tapes would be excellent resources in a pre-natal or parenting class situation.

AARK

Author..... Tremitiere, Barbara
Place & pub. New York : T & S Associates
Call number. CT/518
Mat. type... Audio-cass.
Abstracts...

This program is designed to train social workers to conduct group parent preparation workshops for adoptive or foster parents. The program consists of 8 cassette tapes. The tapes recommend 1 session a week with 9 sessions in total - 3 sessions for self-assessment and 6 sessions for skill building. Preserving prospective parents anonymity until the later sessions is important. Many resources are used in these workshops, such as; a panel of adoptive parents and the adoptive children. Barb recommends several books to the group leaders.

Library has:

Barbara T. Tremitiere et al., Team parent preparation handbook.
HV/875/T42

Dobson, James C., Hide or seek. BF/723/S3/D6

Tape 1: The first tape defines adoption, foster care and permanency. It discusses issues, such as; is adoption for the parents or the child?, who do social workers want to recruit?, the matching process, and the concept of child ownership.

Tape 2: Side 3 of this tape is blank. Side 4 discusses bonding and commitment, how to make them happen. It is the social worker's job to avoid setting up abusive situations.

Tape 3: Unconditional love/caring is the only thing to build the child's self-esteem. The tape cautions the social worker to familiarize themselves with state law to distinguish between law and policy. The sensitive issue of name change is discussed.

Tape 4: The prior sexual experiences of adoptive and foster children is discussed. It deals with the reasons why social workers want to prepare their families. Exercises for parents to discern their values are given. Transactional analysis techniques are used in the remaining tapes.

Tape 5: More questions and exercises are given to aid in the parent's self-assessment process. This tape presents a sensitive session on 'touch'.

Tape 6: The tape discusses the search process, how to set up parents to deal with this issue. The concept of 'shared parenthood' is presented. She suggests parents prepare a history of their children.

Tape 7: This tape is designed to aid parents help their children work through their value systems. It also provides parents with a support system, especially if they do not have support of parents and friends. Therapy may be necessary at some point for some children. Finally, Barb discusses the 'levels of love'.

Tape 8: The final tape discusses the 'Reality Session'. It deals with the various forms available to record progress of the child and

Place & pub. [s.l.] : NACAC Training Conference

Call number. CT/523/pt.1-2

Mat. type... Audio-cass.

Abstracts...

This presentation is from two perspectives, the professional and the parent. Barbara Holmes, a social worker defines the rights of children in care. She explains the stages of involvement for a social worker. Workers often neglect their emotional well-being. Barbara discusses the stages of the placement process. She stresses that workers continually share information with the foster parents, the child, and the adoptive parents during the process. She deals with other issues, such as; transfer of workers; siblings; change of plans and kinds of placements. Pat Krippner, a nurse and adoptive parent discusses moving children from a parent's perspective. She feels good about her placement experience, because she was part of a team. Pat has suggestions for child care workers.

Author..... Tollini, Teresa

Place &amp; pub. [Vancouver, B.C.] : Future Education Films

Call number. VT/529

Mat. type... Video tapes

Abstracts...

Adult victims of incest, sexual and physical abuse tell their stories. It is only in adulthood that they can break the silence. It is always difficult to talk about being molested; it never becomes easy. Males are 96% of the offenders. Men are raised in roles that do not allow them to understand their emotions. They are allowed to be sexual, aggressive and controlling. Molested boys most often become offenders. Men must get involved in the issue of sexual abuse in order to break the cycle.

Tapes 1 &amp; 2 : Supervision

These tapes deal with the primary roles of the supervisor: providing supportive leadership, establishing a climate of trust, and motivating staff. Secondary roles are covered, such as; role of trainer, consultant, evaluator, and developer of resources. The 'nominal group process' is mentioned. Steps are given to aid supervisors to delegate tasks.

Tape 3 : Intake

This tape introduces Maggie Emmons, a new CPS employee. Maggie will appear in the remaining tapes, as she goes through training with various CPS groups. The intake process is discussed with emphasis on the 'reporter' of child abuse or neglect. Maggie and other co-workers attend an in-service session on child development.

Tape 4 : Investigation

The focus of this tape is the investigative process - the planning and the actual investigation. Joint investigations with law enforcement officers is also covered.

Tape 5 &amp; 6 : Ongoing Services

In 'Ongoing Services' CPS involves the family in assessing their service needs. The tape discusses development and implementation of the service plan. Guidelines are given for co-ordinating services especially with a multidisciplinary team. Good record keeping practices are covered. Case termination is handled.

Tape 7 &amp; 8 : The Court

Any case has the potential to go to court. Users are reminded that the United State's justice system is being discussed. The purpose of court intervention is outlined. The importance of CPS working with the family before, during and after court intervention is stressed. The procedure for filing and drafting a petition is covered. The states' attorney gives an in-service training session on the rules of evidence, inferred harm, weight of evidence and act or omission. He also discusses guidelines for being an effective witness. The final topic is implementing the court order.

Tape 9 : Cultural Responsiveness

An in-service training session deals with cultural responsiveness. Dr. Clarice Baker discusses different ethnic groups in the United States. The session covers the historical background and cultural beliefs or principles of these groups. Cultural sensitivity is necessary when making a case decisions involving an ethnic group.

This tape is an unedited recording, therefore not suitable for a presentation. The format is panel discussion with a moderator and one panel member. It deals with the changing family structure and the systems in place to support the changes. The presentation explores how families are coping and how governments and institutions respond. A disquieting fact that arises is a whole generation of expendable children are emerging. These children a product of welfare are malnourished and unable to cope with society. The public policy system in the United States has not recognized these children. The system is still clinging to the image of the traditional family of the 1950's. As these children grow to adulthood, there is not going to be a place for them in society.

Film #1 & Film #2: Something real special.

Families with mentally handicapped children share their lives. The activities of printing one's name, learning to walk, eating breakfast, and playing with other children are shown. Foster parents require a great deal of patience. Progress is slow, but the satisfaction of achievement for child and parent is great.

Tape #1: "Anyone will take a normal child"

Foster parents talk about their mentally handicapped children.

Tape #2: Side 1: "Managing children's behaviour"

Motivation is a problem in changing behaviour in mentally handicapped children. A system of rewards and consistency works well.

Tape #2: Side 2: "I'm constantly in touch"

Open communication with outside services, such as; the child's school, the doctor, and the social worker is very important for foster families.

Author..... Wicker, Holly van Gulden

Place &amp; pub. [Saskatoon, Sask.] : [Sask. Adoptive Parents Association]

Call number. VT/537/pt.1-3

Mat. type... Video tapes

Abstracts...

Holly van Gulden Wicker is an adoptive parent, an adoption counsellor, and a birth sibling of a 'family of adoption'. She is presently writing a book on adoption. In her practice she provides post-placement services to adoptive parents. During her presentation (3 videos) she uses many case studies from her varied experience. Society is questioning adoption. Does it work? Holly explains the myths under which adoption operates. These myths do not give adoption a chance. She believes strongly in adoption. It is an excellent way to provide a permanent stable environment for 'waiting children'. The second segment deals with 'shattered dreams'. Adoption has become a nightmare for families who have lost their dream of adoption. She uses the Kubler-Ross model of grief to describe the loss which the family feels. The key indicators of disruption in adoptive families are: the unfulfilled expectations of adoption and the lack of support for these families. Many parents reach out to the mental health community for help. Often their needs are not met. Holly gives some techniques that she uses working with her families. Finally, she deals with adoptive parent preparation prior to placement. There is less intensity in a family at placement if the child and parents are well prepared. She stresses that there are no guarantees. Holly identifies at least 8 preparation areas. She puts her families in touch with other adoptive parents and advises parents to take turns in crisis situations.

Abstracts...

The host gives an introduction to the history of adoption, especially in Saskatchewan.

Holly has a session with adoptive parents. She covers the 'ages and stages of adoption'. Holly explains how children typically feel about adoption at each stage of child development. She outlines the characteristics of the 'preschooler', their feelings about adoption and the adoption issues that arise. Holly gives many examples and responses for parents to utilize. Creating a family storybook (how the family came together) is an important activity for adoptive parents. The second stage of child development is middle childhood or the latency years. Holly uses the same format to explain this stage. It is important for adoptive parents to be willing to hear their children's pain and to listen to their feelings. Holly lists the things an adoptive parent should know about the adolescents stage. The separation and attachment issue is an important one at this point.

This topic is covered with two videos. The subject matter is presented in a slick, comedy routine format. Role play is also used. This program has wide audience appeal. Everyone deals with difficult people in their personal life and their professional life.

Volume 1:

The choices that you have when dealing with difficult people are outlined. The four elements for dealing with difficult people effectively are described in detail. This presentation deals with 4 types of difficult people: the ruler, the analyzer, the relator, and the entertainer. Finally, basic communications skills/tools and how to apply those skills are presented.

Volume 2:

The primary action step to dealing with difficult people is to weigh the value of your interaction with that person. If you decide to deal with this person, the tape provides nine more steps to consider. It also breaks down eleven chronic problem people by their characteristics, your goals, and your action steps.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON VALUES IN HUMAN SERVICES
(1986 : EDMONTON) [SOUND RECORDING]. c1986 AAMR

Author..... Bonisteel, Roy
Place & pub. Edmonton : Kennedy Recordings
Call number. CT/507
Mat. type... Audio-cass.
Abstracts...

This portfolio contains eight cassettes selected from presentations given at the Catholic Social Services Conference on caring. The focus of the tapes is directed towards the professional care-giver.

Tape A: Opening Address.

Roy Bonisteel, former host of the television program, 'Man Alive' gives the opening address. The news media tells us that we live in an uncaring society. Mr. Bonisteel questions, "did we ever live in a caring society?". Although the era of his childhood was not perfect, he thinks that we should recapture many of those values. We have surrendered too many of our responsibilities to society. We must reclaim them. Working on 'Man Alive', he has seen hope. He has seen how one caring person can make a difference.

Tape 101: Biological aspects of human functioning and its' relationship to caring.

The sound fluctuates too much on this tape to use for a presentation. Dr. Yeudall discusses the hemispheres of the brain, the various abnormal behaviour associated with those hemispheres, and the hormonal structure of the brain. Some of these brain disorders are gender oriented. The message Dr. Yeudall leaves with careworkers is that there are limits to their success with some patients, because of their brain systems.

Tape 103: Caring or treatment: which comes first?

Bruce Uditsky works with the mentally handicapped and evaluates services for the elderly. Mr. Uditsky believes that caring is no longer a focus of human services. Human services organizations have some caring people, but they are caught. They are trapped because their organizations are not aware of their history; therefore they do not learn from their mistakes. He examines the assumption that caring implies treatment. The treatment supplied may not be based on caring. Devalued people in our society do not receive what they need. Bruce proposes that we need less human services. Also, we need a societal perspective of practices in human services and needs of the individuals served by these organizations.

Tape 201: Designing and assessing your services: a strategy for ensuring excellence.

Dr. Hawkins was a probation officer working with juvenile delinquents. He returned to a university setting to better understand the work that he did in that capacity. In this research environment he developed a model of intervention for adolescent substance abuse. He discusses how organizations can build their own models, detailing each building block. Dr. Hawkins is a great advocate of using computerized databases to survey the available literature. He concludes that commitment to performance and quality is necessary for the survival of the organization.

Tape 301: Use of self in clinical work.

George Enns, a social worker and teacher asks himself, "what can I do that would be helpful?". Learning to use self in helping people is an ongoing process, a circular process. The process involves understanding human behaviour. This understanding allows the therapist to change the client's view of the world. A therapist's skills are derived from practice, not family of origins. He advises confronting your bias and using it in a helpful way. Mr. Enns explains his 'process game', which develops intruding skills.

Tape 302: We see what we believe we see.

Dr. Ganam discusses the two conscripts of reality: linear and quantum. Understanding how we process information and how we learn values influences what will happen in a clinical situation. Therapists have a responsibility to negotiate with their clients about their value systems. It's alright to disagree and to make a referral.

Tape 401: Pay me now or pay me later.

The Hon. David Barrett is a social worker as well as a politician. He presents a series of statements about Canada's criminal justice system, the social welfare system and the education system. In these statements he suggests that gross abuses occur in these systems. Eventually, as a society, we will pay for these abuses. He asks if professionals have the WILL to take the lead, to insist on change.

Tape 405: Balance between technology and interpersonal care.

Dr. Trieschmann has faculty, research, clinical, lecturing, and writing experience. She discusses caring issues and the resultant costs from an American perspective. Canada will eventually survey their experiences she feels. Dr. Trieschmann says there is no balance at present between technology and interpersonal caring. She takes a look historically on how western civilization developed its' view of the world. In the twentieth century the American Medical Association has shaped the sickness treatment philosophy. Its' influence and power has made profit paramount. In order for the system to change, she believes that it must first fall apart. Only by rebuilding does Dr. Trieschmann see any hope for a balance approach.

AAMY

Corp.author. World Future Society
Place & pub. Washington, D.C. : Audio Recording Services
Call number. CT/513
Mat. type... Audio-cass.
Abstracts...

This tape is a live, unedited recording. It consists of three presentations on the family and children in the United States and internationally. The first speaker gives an overview of family law in the United States. The law is a reactor, not an initiator. Social changes in the 1960's and '70's forced many changes in the law. Women and children are still not protected during divorce settlement. She concludes that family law is in a state of confusion. It is trying to catch up to social changes. Rachel Tompkins, Executive Director of the Children's Defence Fund is the second speaker. She discusses family related policies in the United States. Americans believe in equal opportunity for all. In reality, women and children suffer from the lack of equal opportunity. Ms. Tompkins gives a scathing report of the Reagan Administration's record in public assistance programs. Many programs for children have been slashed. Unless the government gives adequate support to social programs, the future is dismal. Vivien Derrick, Executive Vice-President of the National Council of Negro Women provides an international perspective. She doesn't find many commonalities between the United States and developing countries. It is possible that developing countries will turn to the United States for role models. The United Nations passed conventions to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women, but legal systems barely touch them. Women are caught up in survival issues. As women in developing countries become more politically active, they may be able to force some change.

LIFE BOOKS [VIDEORECORDING]. 1988

AAGX

Place &amp; pub. [Saskatoon, Sask.] : [Sask. Adoptive Parents Assoc. Conf.]

Call number. VT/539

Mat. type... Video tapes

Abstracts...

This video contains two presentations from the Saskatchewan Adoptive Parents Association Conference. The first presentation is given by three Saskatchewan Social Workers. The session is not intended as a workshop, but a sharing of their experiences. One of the workers conducts an exercise to increase awareness of loss. Children coming into the child welfare system bring few, if any possessions. The purposes of a life book are discussed. The contents of the book are itemized. They stress that it is important to begin the life book, as soon as the child comes into care. It is very advantageous for the foster and adoptive parents to continue the work. The second presentation is on Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) and Fetal Alcohol Effects (FAE). The speaker is affiliated with the University of Saskatchewan Hospital. She describes the effect of alcohol on the fetus, based on the literature, research, and her experiences. There is not a commonly accepted definition of FAS, so the speaker gives her own. She details the symptoms of a baby with FAS. She also discusses the physical and intellectual problems of children with FAS. Medical science has been too quick to define FAS as a native problem, whereas it is a universal one. Finally, she covers prevention.

This tape is commercially produced, but it has not been edited, therefore it is not advisable for use in a presentation. There are three speakers, the first, a female, is not identified. This speaker introduces the session with a presentation on the rehabilitation process. She defines rehabilitation and outlines its' goals. Dr. Barbara Sonnies discusses the communicatively handicapped. This type of handicap not only removes 10% of the U.S. population from the information flow, but society sets limitations on these persons. Dr. Sonnies specializes in the detection of speech and swallowing disorders by ultrasound. The introductory speaker gives a talk on arthritis, its' treatment and the future impact of treatment on function. The speaker also provides recommendations for persons with the disease. The second part of her talk is rehabilitation of the aged. New terminology is emerging for the normal aging process, the young aged and the old aged. Mr. Mueller, an industrial designer gives a brief presentation on vocational rehabilitation. All speakers agree that much can be done in their fields and much should be done. State-of-the-art technology is helping.

This delightful tape is aimed at a family audience or adult/child situation in a classroom or counselling setting. Henry Winkler, Mariette Hartley, and John Ritter appear with Dr. Sol Gordon, Kee MacFarlane, and children from the Children's Self-Help Project. Children introduce each segment. Songs, music, cartoons, and bright colours make the topic easily digestible. Breaks are encouraged throughout the video to allow the audience to connect with each other. The subjects of sexual abuse and abduction prevention are treated with honesty and frankness, dispelling many myths. This approach gives parents a vehicle for discussion about sex with their children. The crucial message is 'keep communication open'.
